I am constantly inspired by people around me who do not know how beautiful they are BECAUSE of their flaws, not in spite of them. We tend to focus on individual imperfections and rough edges instead of looking at the entirety and accepting who we are. I strive to reflect this perspective in my art by not hiding any imperfections I find, instead incorporating them into the piece. Some pieces of wood are nearly flawless, others take extraordinary amounts of work just to keep them together long enough to turn them. All of them have value and beauty and should be celebrated, just as we should be celebrating each other.
