An appreciation for the past resonates in my studio practice and ultimately in my paintings. I create abundant abstract textured works inspired by the interaction of culture, history, architecture, travel and nature. Transformation is an inherently inspiring source for storytelling. The breakdown of architecture and place, the evolution of culture, the way water flows through the earth inspire me to capture their essences and create art somewhere between representational and abstract. With paint and other mediums, I explore the watering down thickening up or suspending to disturb layers or elements that explore a sense of time, memory and place. The Japanese notion of Wabi Sabi embodies the appreciation of honoring that which is broken and acknowledging timeworn services and beauty in imperfection. This concept is key to my practice.
